Pathfinder International believes that reproductive health is a basic human right. When parents can choose the timing of pregnancies and the size of their families, women’s lives are improved and children grow up healthier.

Pathfinder International provides women, men, and adolescents throughout the developing world with access to quality family planning information and services. Pathfinder works to halt the spread of HIV/AIDS, to provide care to women suffering from the complications of unsafe abortion, and to advocate for sound reproductive health policies in the U.S. and abroad.
IDEALLY, reproductive health is the shared responsibility of both partners, but in reality, women bear the children, are most often the ones who use a contraceptive method, and are physically more susceptible to sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS.

As a result, women are the recipients of the majority of services Pathfinder supports: family planning, prenatal and postnatal care, treatment for the complications of unsafe abortion, and prevention and treatment of sexually transmitted diseases and HIV/AIDS. We support these services knowing that women are the most vital link to the health of their families, and when women prosper, so do their children, spouses and partners, and communities.

Today, nearly 600,000 women in developing countries die from pregnancy-related causes each year. Women in developing countries have a 1 in 65 risk of dying from pregnancy or childbirth-related causes during their lives, compared to the 1 in 2,125 risk of women in developed countries.1 This risk also extends to children. By some estimates, 90 percent of babies whose mothers die during or soon after their birth will not live to see their first birthday. Older children do not fare much better. Without their mothers, they often face reduced access to nutritious food, education, and health care.

Family planning is an important tool for reducing these risks. Family planning prevents many maternal deaths by allowing women to space births so that their bodies have time to recover. Birth spacing also benefits babies. Children born at least three years apart tend to weigh more and be healthier at birth. Because teenage mothers are more likely to die in childbirth than women in their early twenties, family planning saves lives by enabling adolescents to avoid the high risks of teenage pregnancy. Family planning also decreases the likelihood that a woman will ever seek out an unsafe, illegal abortion.

At the same time, family planning and reproductive health projects that are linked to initiatives that provide women and adolescents with education and income-generation opportunities have an even greater impact on families and communities. When a woman has earnings to contribute to the household, her decision-making ability within the household increases, and when the earning potential of women is recognized, families are more likely to invest their resources in educating their girl children, as well as the boys. While the relationship between education and childbearing is complex, women with more education tend to wait longer to have children, to have fewer children, and to be better equipped to provide for the health of their children.

Over the past year, Pathfinder has worked to advance the state of women’s health in countries around the globe through a wide array of innovative projects that provide women with the means to avoid unwanted pregnancies and to protect themselves from sexually transmitted diseases and AIDS.

We accomplish this by teaching men to act as partners in family planning, by building women’s self-esteem and training them to negotiate for condom use with their partners, by creating adolescent-friendly services, and by improving the quality of available reproductive health services, in some cases at a national level.

Last year, Pathfinder’s FOCUS on Young Adults program conducted a state-of-the-art training course on adolescent reproductive health in Abuja, Nigeria. The course brought together health experts, Nigerian government representatives, and young people themselves to examine the latest research, policies, and programs with the goal of insuring that adolescents receive quality reproductive health services that meet their needs. In 2001, the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) awarded Pathfinder the CATALYST project. CATALYST’s main focus is expanding quality family planning and reproductive health services to meet the immense demand for these services worldwide.

While 2001 was a year of many successes, it also marked the first time in nearly a decade that the international family planning and reproductive health community was forced to conduct its business under a highly restrictive version of what has come to be known as the global gag rule. This policy prohibits foreign family planning organizations that accept U.S. government funding from using funds from any source to provide abortion services, abortion counseling, or to advocate for changes to their governments’ abortion policies. The gag rule attempts to override other nations’ laws and medical practices, and, inevitably, it exports the American abortion controversy.

As a result of the gag rule, one of Pathfinder’s local partner organizations in Bangladesh is scrambling to replace $1.8 million in U.S. government funding that it lost because it chose to abide by the reproductive health laws of Bangladesh, and not the U.S.-imposed gag rule. If this loss of funding translates into a scaling back of family planning services, the health of women in Bangladesh will suffer.

On the following pages you will read highlights from Pathfinder initiatives around the world and hear from women who are uniting their communities in efforts to improve women’s health and well-being. Pathfinder is proud to support the work of thousands of women like these, women who truly are changing their world for the better.

2001 Accomplishments

Throughout the past year, Pathfinder worked in 28 countries on a variety of projects designed to increase access to family planning, to halt the spread of and lessen the suffering caused by HIV/AIDS, to provide adolescents with services tailored to their needs, to treat the consequences of unsafe abortion, and to advocate for sound reproductive health policies.

Pathfinder’s network of 17 field offices worked with 280 local partner organizations to strengthen their ability to provide quality reproductive health care. In addition to providing its local partners with management and technical skills that help them become more self-reliant, Pathfinder assisted these partners in training 14,551 service providers and community health workers.

Pathfinder’s initiatives provide individuals with the power to make informed choices about their reproductive health, often for the first time in their lives. In 2001, Pathfinder’s projects brought family planning services to 229,990 new users, giving women and couples the ability to protect their health and allowing them to plan a better future for themselves and their families.

Here are some highlights from Pathfinder’s work over the past year to make reproductive health a reality for women, men, and adolescents in the developing world.
In the year since its release, Yellow Card, a feature film produced by Pathfinder International and filmed by Media for Development Trust, has helped to increase teens’ understanding of sexual health issues. In 2001, the movie was shown throughout five African countries, was featured as part of Kenya Airways’ in-flight entertainment, and made its way to audiences in the U.S. on the Starz Encore cable network. Yellow Card will soon be released in 10 additional African countries, and a television series based on the movie is being developed.

On May 28, 2001, the first-ever Sarah Faith Award was presented to the Regional Hospital of Huancavelica in Peru for overcoming immense geographic and cultural barriers to save the life of a woman suffering from complications related to childbirth. The award is organized by Pathfinder’s Peru office and is funded by Sarah Michalko.

Pathfinder’s Reproductive Health Services for Adolescents training curriculum, which teaches health care providers to offer quality services to young people, was adopted by the Mozambican Ministry of Health as the national training curriculum for health care providers. Additionally, the government of Botswana is adapting the curriculum for use nationwide. The adolescent curriculum is the final volume of Pathfinder’s 16-part reproductive health training series designed for use in developing countries.
AIDS has claimed 17 million lives in sub-Saharan Africa and is seriously damaging socioeconomic development in the region. Over 25 million Africans are living with HIV, and two million more women than men are infected with the disease.

For nearly a decade, Pathfinder has integrated AIDS prevention into its family planning projects in Africa. Recognizing that those infected with the disease are in desperate need of services and support, Pathfinder has also become a leader in the home-based care of people living with AIDS. In Ethiopia, Nigeria, Kenya, and Uganda, Pathfinder supports home-based care projects that provide family members with practical training and emotional support that helps them safely take care of loved ones with AIDS. In Kenya, Pathfinder's USAID-funded community-based HIV/AIDS program is mobilizing communities to take action against AIDS through a unified approach that raises awareness of AIDS prevention, improves the quality and safety of care provided at home, links families to available health and counseling services, and supports the work of grassroots AIDS organizations.

Lack of knowledge about and use of contraceptives, especially among sexually active teenagers, leads to high rates of unwanted pregnancy and reliance on dangerous, illegal abortion, as well as to the spread of HIV/AIDS.

“What pains us most is not dying from this disease, but the future and fate of our children.”
- Asunta Wambiu
ASUNTA WAMBIU is one of five HIV-infected women who founded the Kenya Network of Women with AIDS (KENWA), a grassroots community organization for women with HIV/AIDS that receives support from Pathfinder.

KENWA's members work to challenge discrimination against those with HIV, to advocate for the rights of AIDS orphans, and to offer one another psychological and material support. KENWA teaches home-based care techniques to family members caring for a person with AIDS, sponsors income-generating activities for families affected by AIDS, and recently started two small drop-in clinics near slum neighborhoods in Nairobi.

“Our long-term objective is to put a human face to AIDS, replacing statistics with real people, especially women and children, as well as improving the quality of life of those infected and affected by AIDS through counseling, advocacy, and empowerment,” Asunta explains.

Asunta's husband died from AIDS, and her biggest concern is that her ten-year-old son Peter may one day be an AIDS orphan. “What pains us most is not dying from this disease, but the future and fate of our children,” she says.

An important part of what KENWA does is raise funds to provide basic care to children orphaned or affected by AIDS. For the children receiving support from KENWA, Asunta promises, “We shall be their mothers and not only shall we remember their birthdays, we shall support them to be responsible adults. And together we shall be hope against AIDS.”
In many Asian countries, social preferences for early marriage, large families, and male offspring often mean that teenage newlyweds are pressured to have a baby in the first year of marriage. Early age at first pregnancy increases maternal health risks, and frequent childbearing contributes to rapid population growth in a region where many countries struggle with overcrowding and scarcity of natural resources. In Bangladesh, the world’s most densely populated country, Pathfinder’s newlywed program has worked to make family planning services available to young couples since 1993. The newlywed program also increases community support for couples who choose to use family planning by educating community elders and newlyweds’ parents about the risks of early childbearing and the benefits of family planning. Pathfinder’s efforts in Bangladesh have been so successful that Pathfinder is replicating its newlywed program in India.

Throughout Asia and the Near East, Pathfinder works both to improve the quality of reproductive health services and to encourage more women to take advantage of available services. In Azerbaijan, internally displaced people who have fled from their country’s ongoing border war with Armenia typically suffer from poor reproductive health and are unlikely to use contraceptives or seek health care. By training members of the community to educate internally displaced people about reproductive health issues and where services can be obtained, Pathfinder is reducing high rates of unwanted pregnancy, abortion, and maternal and child mortality among this often-neglected group.
Shahida Aktar lives in Kalihati Upazila, a rural area of Bangladesh. When Shahida was married at age 19, she and her new husband were invited to attend a meeting sponsored by the Pathfinder-supported newlywed program. With the information on child spacing and family planning they received at the meeting, together Shahida and her husband decided to delay having a baby so that they could work toward greater financial stability. Despite cultural and familial pressures, Shahida and her husband have stuck to their decision. Today, 23-year-old Shahida has been married for four years, and she plans to wait another two before having her first child.

Shahida's response to the newlywed program has been so positive that the community health worker who organizes it recruited Shahida to work for the program. “When I come across a young newlywed couple who is being pushed by their family to have a baby, I ask them to consider whether they are prepared to care for a child. I ask them if the woman’s body is mature enough to bear a child, and whether they are financially stable enough to support a child. These questions help the couple make a more educated decision about when to start a family,” Shahida explains.

In January, Shahida organized her first meeting for newlyweds and was able to persuade 10 out of 12 newly married young couples in her community to attend. After listening to what Shahida had to say about family planning and observing the example she has set with her own life, all 10 couples chose to postpone pregnancy and to prepare for a healthy and more financially sound future.
Throughout the remote, rural communities of Latin America, many people are isolated from family planning and maternal and child health services by poverty, the mountainous landscape and poor roads, and traditional beliefs and birthing practices that can in some cases be harmful to a woman’s health. Pathfinder is working to prevent maternal deaths in rural areas of Latin America through a culturally sensitive approach that reinforces positive traditional practices and trains community members to introduce safe, modern reproductive health services into their communities.

Abortion is illegal in most Latin American and Caribbean countries, but because contraceptives are not widely available, many women and teenage girls resort to self-induced or back-alley abortions. An important component of Pathfinder’s work in this region is postabortion care, which reaches women suffering from the complications of unsafe abortion with quality care that respects their dignity and provides them with family planning services before they leave the hospital.

Over the past year, Pathfinder has introduced postabortion care services into 16 hospitals and clinics in Bolivia in a program that is modeled on its successful work in Peru, where Pathfinder introduced postabortion services into more than 40 hospitals over the past seven years. Bringing these necessary services to Bolivia presented a huge challenge, and Pathfinder worked for several years with the Bolivian Ministry of Health to gain its approval of the medical procedure used in postabortion care before actual services could begin.

Over the past year, Pathfinder has introduced postabortion care services into 16 hospitals and clinics in Bolivia.
MARIA TAIPE ESCOBAR is a community health promoter in the rural community of Chuñunapampa, Peru who has been trained by Movimiento Manuela Ramos to identify the warning signs of high-risk pregnancies. Maria’s training has helped her to save many women, including her own niece.

Maria’s 16-year-old niece Tomasa was eight months pregnant when she went into convulsions. As Maria recruited neighbors to build a stretcher to carry Tomasa to the health center, Tomasa’s mother, Isabela, attempted to stop them. She said that Tomasa had a cacho, a demon that some rural Peruvians believe can enter a person’s body and cause the person to swell and stop eating.

Maria says, “I told her ‘I’ve seen several women like this. I learned in my training that it is not a demon. If Tomasa stays at home, she is going to die.’” Because Isabela was afraid to take Tomasa to the hospital, Maria promised to go along. Thanks to Maria’s efforts, Tomasa made it to the hospital in time, and her life was saved.

Through the work of devoted health promoters like Maria, changes are taking place in Chuñunapampa. Maria remembers that just a few years ago, people thought it was best for young women to have children between the ages of 13 and 20 and that having children after 20 could be harmful. Now, after receiving education from health promoters and observing the complications suffered by young women like Tomasa, the community recognizes that pregnancy poses a greater risk to adolescents’ immature bodies. Many young married couples in the community have begun using contraceptives to delay pregnancy until they are older. Maria explains, “We have learned to work together to face our emergencies.”
Legacies for Pathfinder International

With the promise of vital support for Pathfinder’s programs in years to come, planned and deferred gifts provide a foundation for Pathfinder’s future work. In recognition of the importance of these gifts, Pathfinder has formed an honorary group titled Pathfinders: Legacies for Pathfinder International.

Fund for the Future

In 1998, Pathfinder embarked on the first major fundraising campaign in its history. Fund for the Future is a ten-year effort to raise $50 million to:

• Support program growth today
• Launch new country programs in the future
• Build an endowment for the future security of Pathfinder

The response to this effort has been strong and heartfelt. As of June 30, 2001, the campaign has raised more than $30 million.
Pathfinder International is deeply grateful to the following donors to the Fund for the Future:

This list reflects gifts received between July 1, 2000 and June 30, 2001.
The fiscal year that just ended has been a challenging one for Pathfinder International. It was a period of transition from the large, single-grant support that the U.S. Agency for International Development had funded since the late 1960s to a web of public and private support agreements and grants that complement and build upon one another. In the budget planning for the year, the Board of Directors authorized a substantial, one-time use of reserves to fund transitional activities.

This transition is now complete. Pathfinder International is making its way through a rapidly changing financial landscape of shorter-term, more targeted projects; a diversified funding base; and fiercely competitive demands for each available dollar. As illustrated here, our priorities are to support direct services and field operations with a minimum outlay of administrative overhead. The decentralization of project management ensures that effective internal controls operate in the field, close to the action. Pathfinder strives to build strong financial controls at home and abroad as we forge effective and enduring partnerships with local organizations.

The financial information presented here is drawn from the audited financial statements of Pathfinder International, which were prepared in conformity with generally accepted accounting principles and have received the unqualified opinion of our independent public accountants, PricewaterhouseCoopers, LLP, in their report to the Board of Directors dated October 5, 2001. Copies of the audited financial statements are available upon written request to our headquarters office.
